These gender-swapped versions of male anime characters are often seen in fan art, alternate universes, or in parody episodes of the respective shows. They usually keep key personality traits while exploring a different dynamic that a female version might bring. Would you like more examples or any specific character details?

These characters and transformations reflect various approaches to gender-bending in anime, from magical curses and body swaps to characters who simply look like they could belong to the opposite gender. This genre often mixes comedy, fantasy, and identity exploration, making it a popular trope inAnime characters who grow beards usually go through significant changes, often reflecting growth, age, or wisdom. Here are a few notable examples of characters who either have a beard or grow one during the course of their series:

1. Roronoa Zoro (One Piece)

- Zoro doesn’t have a beard initially, but as the series progresses, especially in time skips, he has been seen sporting a scruffy beard during certain arcs.

2. Jiraiya (Naruto)

- Jiraiya is a classic example of a character who sports a beard throughout much of the series. His facial hair is a notable feature of his overall look, symbolizing his age and wisdom.

3. Yukimura Sanada (Sengoku Basara)

- In the time skip, Sanada's character grows a beard that adds to his more serious, battle-hardened look.

4. Gintoki Sakata (Gintama)

- While Gintoki doesn't always have a beard, there are moments, especially during comedic arcs, where he grows one for a short period, giving him a more rugged appearance.

5. Hange Zoë (Attack on Titan)

- While Hange doesn't have a full beard, they do grow facial hair in the later seasons of the series, reflecting their leadership role and experiences.

6. Shikamaru Nara (Naruto Shippuden)

- In the time skip after Naruto Shippuden, Shikamaru is seen with a small, neat beard that represents his transition into adulthood and responsibility.

7. Mugen (Samurai Champloo)

- Mugen doesn't have a prominent beard, but there’s a moment where he grows a scruffy beard that fits the rough, wandering nature of his character.

8. Master Roshi (Dragon Ball Z)

- Master Roshi is known for his long white beard, which is a central part of his appearance and ties to his wise, elderly persona.

9. Vash the Stampede (Trigun)

- In the later episodes of Trigun: Badlands Rumble and during certain time skips in Trigun Maximum, Vash grows a beard, which gives him a more mature, worn-out look.

10. Kenshiro (Fist of the North Star)

- While Kenshiro is clean-shaven for most of the series, in some versions of the story (like the more mature, older version), he is depicted with a beard, symbolizing the passage of time and his battles.

These characters demonstrate how a simple beard can be used to convey age, wisdom, or transformation in anime, and it's always interesting to see how their appearance changes over time!

There are a few anime characters who start off without a beard and then grow one later on. Here are some notable examples:

- Naruto Uzumaki from Naruto Shippuden - Naruto doesn't have a beard in the early parts of the series, but by the time of Boruto: Naruto Next Generations, he is shown with a short beard and mustache as an adult Hokage.

- Edward Elric from Fullmetal Alchemist: Brotherhood - While he doesn't exactly grow a beard, there's a moment when Ed looks a bit older in certain scenes, with hints of stubble.

- Yusuke Urameshi from Yu Yu Hakusho - In the later episodes and especially in the manga, Yusuke grows a beard as he matures into adulthood.

- Gintoki Sakata from Gintama - Gintoki is usually clean-shaven, but there are times in the series when he’s seen with stubble or a small beard, especially when he's older.

- Kakashi Hatake from Naruto (in the epilogue) - Though Kakashi is mostly known for being clean-shaven, in the later stages, particularly in Boruto, he is seen with a more mature appearance, with some stubble.

These characters show different stages of growth, from light stubble to full beards, which is often used to indicate maturity or the passage of time.
